

The withered flower

Cristina Bertrand

Shanghai, January 2017

I am listening to the words of a song: A man finds a withered flower, missing its leaves. He cares for it until it recovers its beauty, only to say, at the end of the song that "I am the owner of that flower". And I wonder... do the flowers have owners?

These don't.

